ājāñña, m. [BHS ājanya etc.; from sa. ājāni;

see s. v. ājāniya], a noble, thoroughbred horse; a pure-bred, a thoroughbred (also about bulls and elephants); metaphorically about persons (esp. in cpd.s); to be deduced (as m.) from Mogg-v IV 139 ājāniyassa bhāvo — so eva vā — ājāññaṃ (the sūtra has ~ in dvandva); the traditional explanation connects it, like the variants ājāniya etc., with yjñā (at numerous places, e. g. ad Ja I 181,20+ sārathissa cittarucitaṃ kāraṇaṃ ājānausabhāva, II 40,2 kāraṇākāraṇajānaṇaka); like so many trad. etymologies this rests on the appropriateness of the word, and is hardly meant as a derivation; occasionally (thus Th-a I 71,28 ~o ti ājāniyo jātimā kāraṇākāraṇānaṃ ājānaṇako) the connection with yjan is suggested; an "ājāñña" has the characteristics of noble lineage, and as in Engl. examples are given of āma used as affirmation after a negatively formed question, showing that it implies a negative statement corresponding to the question: Ps II 384,5 = Dhp-a I 54,3 (kim pan' ettha āpattibhāvaṃ na jānāsi ti.) ~ na jānāmi ti; Ps III 433,15 (... na vaṭṭati ti pucchito) ~ na vaṭṭati ...; Ja I 115,8 (pucchī... ambhakam nātaka n'atthi ti) ~ tāta, tumhākam ettha nātaka n'atthi; Ja I 357,22 ~ na gamissāmi; Vism 91,6 (kim pana bhante tumhākaṃ ... na koci atīrekaparikkhāro atthi ti.) ~ āvuso, mañcapīṭhaṃ saṅghikaṃ (o: "they are not mine") ... aṇṇaṃ kiñci n'atthi ti; — āma expressing consent to an order occurs Vin I 324,17 ('paṭikarohi taṃ āpattin' ti so evaṃ vadeti 'āmāvuso, paṭikarissāmi' ti); 324,21; 324,32; — Dhp-a II 191,8 has āma bhante introducing an answer to the question 'ko esa Upatisso nāma?', indicating an application of āma less strict than suggested by the great amount of examples, perhaps much like Engl. "Well". — It seems that āma (as stated above) never stands alone as an answer; the extended form āmo (cf. no: na, atho: atha) may be used instead of āma + word of address; this fact does not appear clearly from our texts, as āmo ti has been considered erroneous and corrected into āmā ti; āmo is mentioned with āma in enumeration e. g. Sadd 896,19, and as an example of its use Sadd quotes Ja VI 418,18* āmo ti so paṭissutvā Mātharo suvaṇḍito (whereas āma is given with ecc. āvuso); examples where āmo may be regarded as the genuine form: te ca me evaṃ putthā āmo ti paṭijānanti, D I 192,18; III 28,18; M II 214,23; A I 173,35; ... iti puttho āmo ti vadeyya, D I 193,17 foll.; 242,8 foll.; M II 33,18; 40,32; āmo ti me paṭināṭe, Ap 498,3 = Th-a C* II 196,8; on the other hand phrases like āmā ti so bravi (and not āmo) seem to indicate that the author of a text does not cite the exact words of an affirmative answer, but only wants to state: he said yes = he answered in the affirmative; thus Mhv V 133, 272, XXX 33, where no v. l. āmo has been found; Mhv-ṭ ad V 133 expressly explains the meaning to be: so there 'āma brāhmaṇa, labbhimhā' ti abravi; a similar case perhaps Ja II 4,12 āmā ti vutte. — Another extension of āma is āmantā (prob. āma + abbreviated word of address), the affirmative interj. used in Abhidhamma catechism, Kv and Yanu passim; quotation As 4,9 foll., Mp II 227,27 = Ps IV 231,7. — The three expressions of affirmation are mentioned Moh 258,33 foll. āvijjhati, āviñjati, āviñchati, āvijjati, āviccati. Behind the bewildering confusion of these spellings, used more or less indiscriminately in Mss. and edd., can be discerned two different verbs with distinct meanings, viz. āvijjhati (pp. āviddha) = sa. āvidhyati “to turn”, and āviñjati or āviñchati (with noun āviñjana or āviñchana) “to pull”; the confusion of the two spellings is probably due to the extreme similarity of űja and űcha in sinh. script, and as the etymology is not known (unacceptable proposals Tr. Notes p. 59 n. 7, Toev. I 31) it cannot be decided whether āviñjati or āviñchati is the correct form of this second verb.
